JAPAN

So much to do...

There are four main islands where people live. Tokyo, the capital of Japan, is on one of these main islands. In Japanese, the language of Japan, the country is called „Nippon“. This means „Land of the Rising Sun,” which is also Japan’s nickname in English. A „nickname” is an informal or friendly name that people use to talk about a person or place.

Land of the Rising Sun

Japan is famous for many things including its landscape, art, music, poetry and food.

Today, Japan may be most famous for its inventions in science and technology.

Many of the pieces of technology that we use every day came from Japan. Japan has many companies that produce technology. For example, many digital cameras are made in Japan.

“Look at London or Paris: they’re both filthy. You don’t get that in Tokyo. The proud residents look after their city.”
– Tadao Ando

So little time

Japanese companies that make digital cameras are Fuji, Panasonic, Canon, and Nikon. Also, many computers and printers are made by Japanese companies. If you have a computer or printer that is made by Sony or Epson then you have Japanese computer or printer.

Japan is also famous for its cars. Japanese car companies include Toyota, Honda, Nissan, and Mazda. Chances are that many pieces of technology in your house including your television, cell phone, and even your digital alarm clock are made by Japanese companies.

These companies are always doing research and developing new products to continue advancing technology in the home.

Japanese companies don’t only make small electronics for personal use. Japan is also a very important country in space exploration. „Exploration” means investigation or discovering new places.

The Japanese Aerospace Exploration Agency does research on planets, aviation etc. Luckily for all of us, the Japanese are continuing to develop new products and technologies to make our lives easier!
